

There exists a great concern about the interference that will be caused with broadband signals sent over existing power lines. There is no reason except to add to the power companies profits and ip suppliers that will utilize this method. Other much cleaner, interference wise, methods of connecting to the internet exist and pose no threat to the quality of existing services. Sincerly, Dennis Goodenough